His Bride.
A gentleman who once made a tour of the Tennessee mountain district says that the lameness of his horse compelled him to stay all day at the rude home of one of the mountaineers, who, in a shiftless, half-hearted way, cultivated a few acres of corn land in the valley.
During the day the man's son, a long, leathery, bony young fellow about 30 years old, and at the last 5 feet and 2 inches tall, was told to go to the "settlement," three miles distant, for some coffee.
His costume consisted of a "hick'ry" shirt and a pair of cotton trousers rolled to the knees above his bare feet. Before starting he went into the cabin for a moment, and when he came out he had added a paper collar and a huge brass breast pin to his attire, whereupon his father said, partly to his son and partly to the stranger:
"Thar ye air agin, rigged out in all that thar finery! I tell ye, mister, that thar boy's pride is bound ter be the ruination of 'im yet. All he thinks of is finery. Fust thing he knows he'll be gittin' 'tew proud tew go tew meetin' 'bar' footed."—

A Valuable Stone.
The Estrella do Sul was found in 1858 by a negro woman at Bogagem, in Minas Geraes, and weighed before cutting 234 carats. The negro woman sold it for $15,000. The Bank of Rio de Janeiro bought it for $150,000. It was reduced to 125 carats in cutting, and was bought by the khedive of Egypt. It is not perfectly white, but its "fire" makes it one of the finest gems in existence.—Jeweler's Weekly.

An original entertainment, which bids fair to become very popular, is occasionally given in New York society. Invitations are issued for a play to be given by amateurs at 10 o'clock in the evening, thus leaving the time devoted to dinner comparatively undisturbed. London, in order to get rid of hurried dinners in the theatrical season, is to have three or four afternoon theatres, so arranged that all the best plays and actors in turn can be seen at them.

A strong alkali at once applied to a snake bite will decompose all the venom which it touches. So if both fangs of the snake have pierced the skin the two wounds should be made one with a sharp knife, and then filled with dry carbonate of ammonia. Frequent small dissolved doses of the same should be taken inwardly, or fifty drops of aromatic spirits of ammonia taken hypodermically, for its peculiar effect upon the blood.

"Go West, Young Man."
"Do you know," said an old timer at the Chicago club, "that that epigrammatic bit of advice to young men, 'Go west,' so generally attributed to Horace Greeley, was not original with him? No! Well, it wasn't. It all came about this way: John L. R. Soule was the editor of The Terre Haute Express back in the '70s, and one day in '75, if I remember right, he and Dick Thompson, afterward secretary of war, were conversing in the former's sanctum. Thompson had just finished advising Soule to go west and grow up with the country, and was praising his talents as a writer.
"Why, John," he said, "you could write an article that would be attributed to Horace Greeley if you tried."
"No, I couldn't," responded Mr. Soule modestly. "I'll bet I couldn't."
"I'll bet a barrel of flour you can if you'll promise to try your best, the flour to go to some deserving poor person."
"All right. I'll try," responded Soule.
"He did try, writing a column editorial on the subject of discussion—the opportunities offered to young men by the west. He started in by saying Horace Greeley could never have given a young man better advice than that contained in the words, 'Go west, young man.'"
"Of course the advice wasn't quoted from Greeley, merely compared to what he might have said, but in a few weeks the exchange began coming into The Express office with the epigram reprinted and accredited to Greeley almost universally. So wide a circulation did it obtain that at last The New York Tribune came out editorially, reprinted The Express article, and said in a foot note that it was a writer.
"The expression of this sentiment has been attributed to the editor of The Tribune erroneously. But so heartily does he concur in the advice it gives that he in-doors more heartily the epigrammatic advice of The Terre Haute Express, and joins in saying 'Go west, young man, go west!'"
